

Muskegon Area Trails

On the Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail.

Photo by Karen Gentry

Muskegon Area Trails

Muskegon Lakeshore Trail

The 12-mile Muskegon Lakeshore Trail follows along the southern shore of Muskegon Lake from Pere Marquette beach to North Muskegon. Spend an afternoon on this series of paved paths and elevated boardwalks and you discover why Muskegon is one of Michigan's top tourist destinations. The trail offers stunning views of Lake Michigan and Muskegon Lake as it travels among the dunes and through several parks and marinas along the way.

Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail

Built on an abandoned C&O Railroad line, the 11.5-mile Fred Meijer Berry Junction Trail is a paved pathway that allows you to ride from Muskegon to the William Field Hart-Montague Trail in Whitehall. The final phase of construction was completed in June 2018. The newest section of trail south of the McMillan Trailhead meanders through mostly oak and pine forest and crosses Bear Creek.

Laketon Trail

The 4-mile Laketon Trail is an important connector that links the Muskegon Lakeshore Trail to the Musketawa Trail. It was built on an abandoned rail bed that runs parallel to Laketon Avenue. To connect with the other trails at either end, you must ride along some city streets. To connect with the Muskegon Lakeshore Trail, head west on Southern Avenue and north on Division Street. To connect with the Musketawa Trail, ride south through the industrial park to the trail entrance just north of East Sherman Boulevard on Black Creek Road.

The trail follows the edge of Muskegon Lake.