Battle Creek Linear Park

Health and wellness have been major contributors to Battle Creek's history, including the invention of breakfast cereal. Citizens and visitors alike enjoy the Battle Creek Linear Park. With more than 28 miles of paved trails, it's a great way to spend a day, or a weekend, exploring the history and scenery of America's Cereal City.

Developed in several phases over the past 20 years, this path was one of Michigan's first nonmotorized, multi-use trails. Whether you run, ride a bike, or just want to go for a leisurely stroll, the Battle Creek Linear Park offers a pleasant excursion for everyone.

The river route, which follows along the edge of the Battle Creek and Kalamazoo rivers, is perhaps the most popular stretch of the trail. The northern route passes through several parks and points of interest, and a couple fun loops. You may want to reference this map on your mobile device (visit our website) to help you navigate the northern route.

Calhoun County Trailway

The Calhoun County Trailway was completed in November 2014. The 5.28-mile nonmotorized multi-use trail connects Battle Creek Linear Park to Historic Bridge Park, traveling through Ott Biological Preserve and Kimball Pines County Park, and intersecting the North Country Trail. The 10-foot-wide trail surface is finely crushed and compacted gravel with several scenic stretches of elevated boardwalks. The section of trail through Ott Biological Preserve is exceptionally scenic.
